

Global Health Fellows Program-Deadline: November 30, 2009

Intended to prepare future leaders in global health, the Global Health Fellows Program, part of Duke's Program on Global Policy and Governance, provides an eight to 12-week internship at one of Geneva's many intergovernmental or non-governmental organizations. In addition, all fellows participate in a one-week, intensive course, "Health Policy in a Globalizing World," co-organized with the World Health Organization and complemented by site visits throughout Geneva.

Applications are due Monday, November 30. For more information and to download an application form, visit www.pubpol.duke.edu/geneva/.

Public Health Prevention Service 2010 Term-Deadline: February 15, 2010

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) has developed and implemented a program designed to train and prepare tomorrow's public health managers. The Public Health Prevention Service (PHPS) is a three-year training and service program for master's level public health professionals.

Approximately 25 prevention specialists enter the program annually. The program focuses on public health program management and provides prevention specialists with experience in program planning, implementation, and evaluation through specialized hands-on training and mentorship at CDC, and in state and local health agencies.

The eligibility requirements for this program are the following:

- A master's degree in public health or related field;
- U.S. Citizenship;
- A strong desire for a career in public health practice;
- Above average academic achievement in core areas of public health; and
- At least one year of paid public health-related work experience.

The application deadline for the October 2010 start date is Monday, February 15, 2010. For more information, visit www.cdc.gov/phps or E-mail phpsepo@cdc.gov.
